Lloyd George, on Eve of Parliament's Consideration of Treaty To-day, Reveals How He Failed to Convince North That Union Was for Her Own Good.

LONDON, Dec. 13 (Associated Press).-Premier Lloyd George to-day made public the correspondence exchanged between himself, as head of the Government, and Sir James Craig, Ulster Premier, dealing with the Irish negotiations. These letters bore dates of from November 10 to De-Entire Irish Army Staff Is cember 5. They were supplemented later by a letter made public by Sir James addressed to the Prime Minister, under date of July 29, which he said was necessary to maintain the sequence of events.

The Ulster Premier in these letters unequivocally declared that Ulster ould not enter an All-Ireland Parliament, but was willing to accept three out of the four proposals of the British Government.

Mr. Lloyd George argued that two dominions in Ireland were indefen-BOTH SIDES SUSPICIOUS sible. The correspondence comprises four letters sent by Mr. Lloyd George and three by Sir James Craig. Mr. Lloyd George's latest letter covered a copy of the Irish treaty. On November 10 the Prima Minister wrote to Sir James as follows:

"The time has arrived when a formal consultation between his Majesty's Government and the Government of northern Ireland is necessary for the further progress of the Irish negotiations. The settlement toward which his Majesty's Ministers have been working and which they believe is not unattainable 's closely based upon proposals made by his Majesty's Government July 20."

The Prime Minister then enumerated the main principles of such a settlement, declaring that if Ireland should give allegiance to the throne she would take her place in "the partnership of free States comprised in the empire."

"The Government of northern Ireland," the letter continued, "would retain all the powers conferred upon her by the Government of Ireland act. the unity of Ireland would be recognized by the establishment of an all Ireland Parliament, upon which would devolve the further powers necessary to form a self-governing Irish State."

"Favoritism to Be Feared."

Continuing, the letter said:

"Northern Ireland will no doubt see many dangers in a settlement on these lines. It may be objected, for instance, that the patronage involved in the various gargement between local officials and the men, based on the service requirements of that section of the country.
